The Symbolism of the "Mace" is ancient in origin and embodies the Roman Magistrate truism "United We Stand, Divided We Fall." Adopted in 1789 by the United States Congress as their symbol of authority and respect. The Mace is made of 13 ebony rods bound in silver and capped with a globe and eagle. "The Mace" is one of the three symbols in the seal of A Presidential Classroom For Young Americans

NATIONAL STUDENT BODY

It is the double impact of interaction with a cross-section of their peer group, and exposure to leadership in government, that makes Presidential Classroom a particularly relevant and exciting program for today's youth. The firsthand, in-depth look at government helps prepare them for their role as citizen and voter. The confrontation, exchange and new understanding—a continual process within the group itself—contribute to the total growth of each young person.

Participants come to the Capital from all over the continental United States, as well as from the U. S. territories, and Department of Defense and Department of State dependent high schools abroad. An average of 246 anxious but enthusiastic students were met each week at air terminals, and bus and train stations, ready to adopt The Shoreham as their new home and Washington as their Classroom. Though given some opportunity to visit the historic and special attractions of the Capital, the students spent most of each day in seminar sessions around the city, learning about the pressures, problems, and actual functioning of our system of government from those who are involved in making it work.

A determined effort was made to assure that a wide scope of backgrounds was present among roommates and in study sections. Evening discussion groups, both planned and spontaneous, provided a very special opportunity for serious sharing of opinions and ideas about topics of real concern—the interplay of geographic, economic, social and interpersonal differences, the discovery of sameness.

The 1973 National Student Body reached nearly 1,500, bringing the number of Alumni of Presidential Classroom to over 5,000. The following words reflect an experience they all have in common—

An opening of eyes

Possibly discovering of lies
Relaxed feelings with people you meet
Endless longing for sleep
Seeing beautiful sights
Introduced to the home of our First Rights
Dedicated to the never-ending list of things to do
Enlightenment from learning things you never knew
Now being left more on your own
The times you feel a little alone
It means leaving everything old behind
A time we search for anything to find
Leaving your home by car, jet or train
Caring very much when it started to rain
Learning the different ways of life
Awareness of many kinds of strife
Satisfaction in yourself for being here
Sure that you had no reason to fear
Reading your syllabus—or at least carrying it around
On your trips and travels all over town
Outstanding answers to the Hows and Whys
Much sadness during Saturday Goodbyes

(by Mary Caruso—Class 1)

Understanding government and getting involved is what Presidential Classroom is all about.

The question and answer portions of all seminars provide an interesting means of government study.

In small sections, students can work with their instructors to grasp the concepts of our political system that aren't easily extracted from a speaker's comments.

HISTORY

The idea of a nonpartisan educational program in government and politics for American youth grew out of the experience with two pioneer projects in Washington, D. C. The first of these was the White House Seminars, which was initiated in 1962 and evolved into the present Summer Intern Program for college students. The second was Widening Horizons, which was launched in 1963 as a volunteer program sponsored by Cabinet wives. Its purpose is to acquaint inner-city students with their government and to attract them to government careers.

In the mid-1960's, the evident impact of these programs on their participants led to the concept of a broader-based student program whose goal would be to bring young people from all sections of the United States and its territories, to Washington, D.C. for an in depth study of the governmental process. With the encouragement and assistance of numerous government officials, state and local educators, and private citizens, the White House staff began the development of A PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

As planning continued, a major problem was encountered in guaranteeing permanent non-partisanship of the new program. Reluctantly, the White House staff concluded that such a major program, if conducted under official White House or Government sponsorship, would inevitably become identified with the incumbent President and with the political party he represented. The program concept, however, had by then accumulated such wide-scale support and planning momentum that it could not be abandoned. Instead, the search turned to alternate means of implementing the program so as to preserve its intent and scope, and to maintain its independence from partisan influences.

The way was found. With the dedicated assistance of a group of civic-minded individuals, A PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM FOR YOUNG AMERICANS was incorporated in the District of Columbia as a nonprofit, nonpartisan educational organization committed to carrying out the original White House concept. The date was October 3, 1968. Work now proceeded swiftly; all of the original White House staff work, including memos and research materials, was transferred to the new staff of A PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM FOR YOUNG AMERICANS. Five months later, in February 1969, the first National Student Body was convened in the Nation's Capital. Since then, over 5,000 American high school students from every State in the Union, its territories, and dependent schools abroad have participated in the Program, which remains a unique cooperative undertaking inspired by the needs of modern citizenship and the potential leadership embodied in American youth.

ADMINISTRATION

Over 40,000 man-hours went into the preparation of the 1972 Program. While the 1971 Program was still in progress, plans for the 1972 Student Program were well underway. The long process of translating ideas and plans into the reality of a "Classroom" for 1,500 students was demanding, but exciting, as the staff worked to put together the ingredients of an effective program.

Though the ultimate success of the Classroom hinges on the interaction of the students—the unpredictable "ingredient" of tremendous potential—success in developing the framework for their experience depends on the cooperation and coordination among members of the staff. Throughout the spring and summer the Central Staff was involved in registering and developing the next Classes, many months away. Slowly, as the classes started to fill and the Curriculum began to take shape, the momentum was gradually building.

During the early winter months, the Teaching Staff was brought together from 14 government agencies.

The teachers were assigned as a team of two to each section, one to work during the day and the other to take over for the evening activities. When the Classroom was in session, however, the teachers enthusiastically volunteered to spend many extra hours with their students, thereby establishing a rapport that greatly contributed to the impact of the '72 Program. Experts in their own fields, the teachers could convey the workings of governmental processes on a personal level, resulting in a dynamic learning experience.

The hundreds of applications were processed, student preparation materials sent out, and scheduling arrangements confirmed. Finally the time came to set up the center of operations at The Shoreham Hotel where the students were housed. Administrative and Curriculum Offices were soon readied, as well as an infirmary and information centers, right on the "dormitory" floor. Staff Assistants, coming from various branches of the military, joined the Program in order to help things function smoothly. All awaited with anticipation the arrival of the single most important element—the students themselves, coming with their own expectations, backgrounds and ideas.

The first class arrived Saturday February 12th—students from all over the country came together, and were given the opportunity to interact with distinguished speakers in seminar sessions, visit various Departments and Agencies of government, and engage in an important sharing of feelings among themselves. The pace of the program was indeed a challenge. Sleep was scarce, meals were rushed, and working overtime was a way of life. Yet the excitement that the Classroom generated was contagious, making the work of the staff a deeply rewarding experience.

Most of the work involved in making the Program run smoothly goes on unnoticed. Here Staff Member Verna Groo works with "Hal" our pet I.B.M. miracle machine.

Some of our Instructional Staff were only with us for the first half of the Program. After Graduation, they pose for a farewell picture.

Coordinating the Program is a difficult job. Staff meetings are necessary, the size varies from two to twenty.

ANGIE WHITAKER Executive Director

The position of Executive Director of Presidential Classroom is a difficult and demanding one. The ultimate success or failure of the Program is in the hands of the person holding this position. Mrs. Whitaker proved this year that she was capable of administering the directorship. The success of the Program is evidence of her contributions.

THE CLASSES

The National Student Body of Presidential Classroom was composed of six classes during the 1972 Program. The classes were in session during February and March, each Saturday bringing a mixture of goodbyes from departing students, and greetings to those just arriving. At registration each student received a room and a section, both assignments carefully made to achieve the maximum geographic mixture. Thus the stage was set for exchange and exposure to new perspectives.

Each section consisted of approximately 40 students with two instructors. The section provided an effective learning unit—a qualified instructor being available throughout the day for immediate response to student questions, and section meetings providing opportunity for frank discussion of the day's happenings. Deep mutual appreciation developed within sections between students and instructors, evidenced especially during graduation and banquet activities.

Each section as well as each class developed its own identity and personality. Schools were encouraged to divide their representation among the different classes, as each class, with speaker variations and student differences, represented a completely different experience.

CURRICULUM

The 1972 Curriculum drew on many resources: The Syllabus of Study, the Current Guide to American Government, evening discussion groups, teacher sessions, complimentary Time and Newsweek Magazines. Perhaps the most dramatic aspect of the Curriculum was the Seminar, in which the students enjoyed the unique opportunity of confronting government officials and other prominent citizens, and engaging them in vigorous question and answer periods.
